THE HIDDEN TRUTH

The problem is not a lack of love. It is love out of alignment.

You care. You try. You even say sorry. Then the same argument returns, the same silence fills the room. Gottman Institute research found 69% of couple conflicts are perpetual, rooted in old patterns, so winning the argument never solves them.

Today: the quiet distance
You talk about bills, chores and kids, never about the two of you.

Year 1: the repeat fights
The same argument returns with new words, with a little less warmth each time.

Year 3: the roommates
One home, one bed, one calendar, but not one heart.

Year 10: the regret
"We loved each other once." Love was never the problem. The drifting years were.

Why it matters: the Harvard Study of Adult Development found people most satisfied in their relationships at 50 were the healthiest at 80. Your relationship is not a side topic. It shapes your peace, your focus and your health.
